Post-Lisbon EU Law Enforcement and Data Protection

Prof. Dr. Gert Vermeulen

CBPL - CPVP – Brussels, 21 May 2010
Approach

› law enforcement in the EU: information exchange
  › within respective MS
  › between MS
  › between EU bodies/agencies and 3rd countries/organisations
  › between MS and 3rd countries

› traditional purpose of law enforcement = criminal investigation, aimed at bringing justice
  › traditionally: by & between judicial police & justice actors
  › vs administrative-governmental-military-political purpose
    › including intelligence activity
Problems

› where infoex for law enforcement purposes
  › allows/institutionalizes bypassing of criminal procedural guarantees
  › leads to purpose deviation/is based on hollow purpose limitation or speciality principles
  › is based on rules disrespecting fundamental principles
  › is left tot merely control, monitoring, eminent person oversight etc

› application
  › in the EU internally
  › in 3rd states/organisations (case: US internally)
  › between EU and 3rd states/organisations (case: EU-US)
EU internally (pre-Lisbon)

- directive 95/46/EC
  - Article 3: non-applicable to police/justice/criminal law (3rd pillar)
  - but implemented into that area by certain MS (including Belgium)
  - and: 1st pillar (commercial) data are relevant for law enforcement
- 2000 EU MLA Convention (telecom interception)
- intelligence services break-in to Europol, SISII, VIS, etc
- OLAF investigations
- data retention telecom data, EU-PNR + 2006 & 2009 ECJ cases
- framework decision 2008/977 data protection 3rd pillar
  - existing specific regimes/agreements unaffected
  - only limited guarantees for further transfer to 3rd states
  - transfer own information to 3rd states not covered
  - assessment adequate data protection level
    - per MS (full discretion)
EU internally (post-Lisbon)

- general institutional changes
- data protection as a subjective right
  - Article 8 EU Fundamental Rights Charter (text)
  - Article 16 TFEU (text) - consequences for existing instruments
    - directive 95/46 (none)
    - framework decision
      - theoretically yes: obligation to adopt new instrument
      - in practice unlikely: unenforceable
      - if after all: advantage: new framework must also cover
        - domestic information exchange
        - transfer own information to 3rd states
    - all other non-data-protection specific instruments (none)
General institutional changes

› pillar structure not totally abandoned (unlike European Constitution)
  › TEU (former 2nd pillar) & TFEU (former 1st and 3rd pillar)
  › (slight) domain-specific differences retained in TFEU
  › including for: area of freedom, security and justice (AFSJ)
    › Title V TFEU – umbrella chapter for reunited JHA domains
› single set of legal instruments (including in former 3rd pillar matters)
  › regulations and directives
  › full introduction supranationality for police/justice/criminal law
› ordinary decision making process for former 3rd pillar (exceptions)
  › co-decision (examples)
  › qmv (exceptions) + emergency break
  › right of initiative: Commission (NB 2 commissioners) or ¼ of MS
