

IN BETWEEN MONOLINGUAL POLICY AND MULTILINGUAL CLASSROOMS: MAPPING THE IDEOLOGICAL FRAMEWORKS OF FLEMISH TEACHERS

Teachers are at the epicenter of language education policies, as they interpret, negotiate, resist, and (re)create language policies in their classrooms. As such, they are not solely "servants of the system" and "bureaucrats that follow orders unquestioningly" (Shohamy 2006:76): teachers fulfill a pivotal role in between language policy, often imposed on school top-down by the government, and the everyday classroom practice (Menken & García 2010). Especially in regions where the language-in-education policy is strictly monolingual, but classrooms increasingly become multilingual and superdiverse environments, it is difficult for teachers to uphold a firm position: on the one hand they are supposed to abide by the rules, firmly ingrained in their mindsets by teacher training programmes, rules and legislations, on the other hand their focal point should be what their pupils need, and making the correct (linguistic) choices and decisions (e.g. Hélot 2010).

In Flanders, the northern, Dutch-speaking part of Belgium, this gap between monolingual policy and multilingual classrooms is incessantly widening. On an intralingual level, Tussentaal ('in-between-language') emerged as a cluster of intermediate varieties between the Flemish dialects and Standard Dutch, gradually becoming the colloquial language. At the same time, Flanders counts a growing number of immigrants and languages. The Flemish language-in-education policy deals with these (perceived) problems of substandardisation and multilingualism by imposing a strict monolingual policy, propagating Standard Dutch as the only acceptable language variety (AUTHOR & De Caluwe 2014). This paper analyses the very different ways in which 80 Flemish teachers of primary and secondary schools in try to make sense of this gap between policy and practice, and how they act upon what is expected from them in a classroom context. By combining participant observation data and interview data, we make an attempt at mapping their personal ideological frameworks, in order to uncover the capricious ways in which teachers respond to language education policies.

References

- AUTHOR & J. De Caluwe (2014). 'Eliminating social inequality by reinforcing Standard Language Ideology? Language policy for Dutch in Flemish schools'. In: Current Issues in Language Planning 15 (3-4).
- Hélot, C. (2010). "'Tu Sais Bien Parler Maîtresse!": Negotiating Languages other than French in the Primary Classroom in France'. In K. Menken and O. García (eds.), Negotiating Language Policies in Schools. Educators as Policymakers; New York, NY: Routledge, 52-71.
- Menken, K. & O. García (eds.) (2010). Negotiating Language Policies in Schools. Educators as Policymakers. New York, NY: Routledge.
- Shohamy, E. (2006). Language policy: Hidden agendas and new approaches. London: Routledge.

[Eligible for the Chambers Award for young scholars]